Cherish Our Desk, Preserve Our Dignity

第一段: 引入问题

第二段: 描述具体现象+呼吁具体的措施

第三段: 结尾再次呼吁+强化责任

Good morning. Today, I want to talk about protecting public property 公共财产/公物, especially our desks in the classroom. Recently, I have found our classroom are suffering from serious damage, which has become a common problem in our class. Our once tidy and smooth desk surface are now covered with random markings, deep ink stains and sharp knife cuts, and some are even carved with rude words. (描述具体现象).

Such improper act not only ruins classroom tidiness and spoils the learning atmosphere, but also inconveniences subsequent users and adds school maintenance costs. What is more, it reflects the lack of public property protection awareness. For the sake of a civilized and tidy campus, we must stop scribbling (乱涂乱画) on desks with pens and knives, clean up/remove all stains on the desktops and actively supervise each other to these destructive behaviors.

或 These desks are public property, meant for all of us to use with respect. Damaging them not only affects our learning environment, but also shows a lack of responsibility and respect for our school facilities. Let's take action/swing into action now: stop drawing at random on desks, clean/remove them gently, and remind each other to care. A tidy classroom starts with each of us. Together, with our joint efforts, let's protect our shared space and preserve our dignity!

Such behavior goes against our moral standard/reflects our personal integrity and shows a lack of respect for the public property as well as the efforts of those who maintain school facilities.

Take a closer look at our desks—they are crying out in pain. Scattered notes, ink stains, and even knife scratches/cuts have turned them into ugly "graffiti walls."

These desks are not just pieces of school equipment; they are our silent study companions. Every cut or scribble we leave is a scar that steals their dignity. A clean desk reflects a noble mind, while a damaged one reveals carelessness and disrespect. By mistreating public property, we are actually hurting ourselves—turning our own learning environment into a place of chaos and ugliness.

Swing into action now, and treat every desk with kindness and respect. The beauty of our school lies in our hands. Let's protect it, not destroy it!

Dear teacher and classmates,

Good morning. Today, I want to talk about protecting public property, especially our desks in the classroom.

Recently, I was saddened/disturbed/worried/disappointed to find our classroom desks in a terrible state. The once clean and tidy surfaces are now covered with random drawings, messy scribbles (乱涂乱画) and even deep scratches (乱涂乱画). These marks not only ruin the beauty of our classroom but also negatively affect our learning mood, showing a lack of respect for school property.

Our desks are our silent partners in learning, and it is our responsibility to protect them. I sincerely hope we can stop hurting them and treat every piece of furniture with care. Let's act now to bring back a tidy and comfortable study environment! Thank you!

Recently, I've noticed that many desks in our classroom are covered with scribbles and scratches/random markings. What used to be a clean learning space now looks messy and neglected.

Treasure Library Books: Our Shared Responsibility

Recently, when I walk into our library, I've noticed a troubling issue that deserves our attention.

Not only are the margins of classic novels filled with underlines and doodles, but textbooks also often have missing solution steps penned in by previous users. This creates real problems. It hinders later borrowers' learning and violates the principle of sharing public resources fairly. Essentially, it damages something that belongs to all of us.

We can and must do better. It starts with simple, conscious actions: using bookmarks instead of folding pages, taking notes in our own notebooks, and gently reminding friends to do the same. By treating every book with respect, we preserve knowledge for everyone and strengthen our community. Let's make our library a true sanctuary for learning, together.

Have you ever opened a library book only to find it filled with underlines, notes in the margins, or even small doodles? This common sight is more than an eyesore; it seriously disrupts every reader's chance to engage with the text.

These books are a communal treasure, purchased for all of us to share and learn from. When we mark them, we damage this shared resource and show disregard for our fellow students.

We can easily change this. Let's all make a simple pledge: to use bookmarks, take notes in our own notebooks, and handle every book with clean hands. By making these small, conscious choices, we actively build a culture of respect and shared care in our school. A well-kept library benefits everyone.

The pristine pages of our classic novels are now invaded by a web of highlights and impulsive notes. These personal imprints, however well-intentioned, transform a silent conversation with the author into a crowded, confusing dialogue for everyone who follows.

我们经典小说原本洁净的书页,如今布满了各种高亮线和随意的笔记。这些个人的印记,无论初衷多好,都将读者与作者间静谧的对话,变成了令后来者感到拥挤和困惑的喧哗。

Change begins with a simple switch: reach for a bookmark, not a folded corner. This tiny act of consideration preserves the book's structure for countless future readers. Let's make this graceful habit our new norm.

改变始于一个简单的替换:伸手去拿书签,而不是折起书角。这个微小的体贴之举,能为无数后来的读者保全

书籍的品相。让我们将这份优雅的习惯变为新的常态。

Our collective voice is powerful. Advocate for a “Respect the Read” week, posting reminders and sharing tips. By championing this culture, we don’ t just protect pages; we cultivate an environment where respect is as fundamental as respiration.

Undoubtedly, books are a treasure trove of information, and the library books are shared properties of all students. Therefore, it is every student’ s inherent responsibility to protect them. Let’ s resist the temptation to draw or mark randomly, keep each book clean and intact, and ensure more classmates can immerse themselves in the wonderful sea of knowledge.
